WebAIM is holding a two-day Web Accessibility training on March 2-3, 2011 in Logan, Utah for those who want to ensure that their web site is completely accessible.

The training is geared primarily for web developers, however web administrators, content providers, and instructors will also benefit.

This training session will teach everything from basic web accessibility principles to advanced accessibility techniques. It will cover everything needed to make sure a web site meets legal guidelines and international standards.

Participants should have a basic understanding of the fundamentals of HTML and web development techniques. No prior web accessibility knowledge is required.

Registration is limited to ensure you get individualized attention. Register early on the WebAIM web site.
